Civil and social commitments Volunteering and training support activities

- As chairman of the Turin Chamber of Commerce, he focused on the non-profit sector. In 2006, he set up and promoted the Civil Economy Observatory intended to:
 - interpret the transformations of entrepreneurial activity in the so-called Third Sector;
 - strengthen the development of new models of interaction between the profit and non-profit worlds;
 - promote the intrinsic potential of the civil economy;
 - support social innovation projects and new forms of entrepreneurship;
 - identify suitable pathways to create a system of synergistic collaborations with public and private organisations;
 - promote and develop social enterprise and the creation of inter-organisational and/or entrepreneurial networks.
- His civil commitment had already taken shape as early as 1974, when he began to volunteer for the Gruppo Abele di Torino, focusing in particular on:
 - the first “Drug Centre” in Italy, a place to receive, support and listen to young people with drug addiction problems, acting as an important source of testimony and reporting that led to the relevant law being changed;
 - promoting, organising and launching the Group’s first “production and work” cooperatives to find employment for socially disadvantaged people and ensure the economic sustainability of manufactured products.
- In the 1990s, he provided training and professional support, with testimonials and contributions in support of people working in the social volunteering sector.
